Students donate van full of blankets to Cancer Center at American Fork

Students in the National Honor Society at Timpanogos High School donated a van full of hand-tied fleece blankets for the patients at American Fork Hospital's Cancer Center. It took several trips from the van to the center in order to get all the gifts inside.

Many students in the group have family members who have been helped at the Cancer Center so they had special motivation to donate the blankets. They also plan to donate the proceeds from their annual sucker sale as well.

"We've already given most of them away and the patients have loved the warm, fuzzy, fun prints. What a great thing for these young people to do for our patients," says Shelly Weber, administrative assistant at the Cancer Center.
